EDITORIAL

We are publishing in this issue of the Law Review articles prepared by two of Wisconsin's greatest jurists. It is our good fortune to present herein a discourse by the Hon. Marvin B. Rosenberry of the Wisconsin Supreme Court, on "Recent Progress in Judicial Administration and Procedure in Wisconsin," and it is our further good fortune to present a treatise on "Instructions to the Jury," by the Hon. Oscar M. Fritz, Judge of the Second Judicial Circuit. The experience gained by years of faithful service on the Bench has signally fitted them to handle the respective subjects, and to be able to furnish our readers a number in which appears the masterful thought and ability of these distinguished gentlemen is extremely gratifying.

We also have the pleasure of presenting an article entitled "Preparation and Conduct of Jury Trials," by Daniel H. Grady of Portage, one of Wisconsin's most successful trial lawyers.

The Marquette Law Review is deeply grateful for these splendid contributions. We know they will be read with keen interest.
